

London interior design studio Helen Green Design has just completed an apartment at Kings Library for specialist property developer Tenhurst. It joins the dynamic design studio's portfolio, which spans listed townhouses in Belgravia and country homes in Sussex, as well as Caribbean hotels. This time, the studio was appointed to design a contemporary apartment within Kings Library, a listed former school located in the heart of Chelsea by renowned Edwardian architect Thomas J Bailey.

Due to its location, the new four-bedroom pad boasts spectacular views across the gardens of Kings Chelsea. It has been designed to maximise light that streams through sash windows, while its double height ceilings give increased volume.

The apartment's location inside a place of learning is also alluded to in its design. Despite its grandeur, the corridor space has also been cleverly designed to create intimate areas including a modern take on a library featuring sporting memorabilia and artwork by Mao Wen Biao.

There is also a media room which floats seamlessly above the dining room, accessed from the library by a spiral

PREVIOUS PAGE : In the grand drawing room, the antique Victorian desk behind the sofas, dual fireplaces, curiosity cabinet and wood panelling hints at a head master's study

THIS PAGE, ABOVE : Tim Murray, Creative Director at Helen Green Design Studio

LEFT: The 'Thomas Bailey Grey' finish complements the distinctly masculine palette especially shown in the dining room with its emerald greens, sage grey and cognac tones

